

THE STRUGGLE OF INDIVIDUAL PURSUIT IN THE FAMILIAL CONTEXTS IN ARAVIND ADIGA, FLORA NWAPA AND BRITT BENNETT'S LITERARY UNIVERSE

Dr. Shekhar Raina, Assistant Professor, CT University, Ludhiana

Abstract

Aravind Adiga emerged on the Indian fictional scene in the 2000s. He is a well-read Indian author who writes in English, having been educated at Oxford and Columbia errs on the side of an unconvincing colloquialism by making his characters speak a language of the Indian underground, which he himself masters only to a certain extent. The novel Selection Day is described about the individual pursuit of the middle class family, and how the middle class boy overcomes the rich one. The, Selection Day novel is standing an evident of confronting with individual pursuit of both of the Cricket players. It is taken to be critically analyzed the tragic life of Mohan Kumar and his two sons.

The conflict of Individual Pursuit in Aravind Adiga's Selection Day

Individual pursuit is about seeking a better place in an individual pursuit should be quenched by confronting with it since it is felt as a thirst. Mohan has an individual concern on his two loveable sons, Manju and Radha to win the cricket. Here, cricket is an individual pursuit to the both boys. The, Selection Day novel is standing an evident of confronting with individual pursuit of both of the Cricket players. It is taken to be critically analyzed the tragic life of Mohan Kumar and his two sons.

Manju is fourteen years old and he knows he is good at cricket- if not as good as his elder brother Radha. He knows he fears and resents his domineering and cricket- obsessed father, admires his brilliantly talented brother and is fascinated by CSI and curious and interesting scientific facts in individual pursuit. But there are many things, about him and about the world that he doesn't know...Everything around him, it seems, has a clear idea of who Manju should be, expect Manju himself.

When Manju begins to get to know Radha's great rival, a boy as privileged and confident as Manju is not everything in Manju's world begins to change and he is faced by decisions that will challenge both his sense of self and of the world around him.

Mohan has some straight rules to be followed by his sons to achieve. Their goal means becoming the first one. This paper criticized the ups and downs of the Young boys who are confronting with their individual pursuits. The individual pursuit is an event where two cricketers begin the race from a stationary position on opposite sides of the track as clearly shown in the novel, Selection Day.

The novel starts with the conversation between Pramod and Tommy sir. Tommy sir starts his past life as when he was 21 years old, he behaved working on a history of the Maratha Campaign at the third battle of Pan Pat It had a little, "1761: the soul breaks out of its encirclement." Then he says him that he had a news for Pramod that there was a younger brother who was fond of playing cricket Pramod replied him that he was sick of cricket.

Younger brother bats today at the Oval maiden. He is nearly as good as his big brother. The younger brother is called Manjunath Kumar. Commonly he is called Manju. He is the biggest secret in Mumbai cricket today. The boy is the real thing. Tommy sir should be writing for the Times of Great Brittan of London.

Tommy Sir is a Grey haired man. He is a taller and wiser than coach Sawant. Pramod Sawant is a Chubby and Mustached man in his early forties. He had an important play in Bombay Cricket. He was a man of some important position that is head coach at the Ali Weinberg International School. He was a runner- up in last year's Harris Shield. Head Coach Sawant was a fat pipe in the filtration system that sucks in strong wrists. He thinks that one sudden morning pours into an open field where two or three players will be picked for the Mumbai Rangy Trophy team.

Manju is a real son of a bitch. He has got the way of deflecting everything off his pads. Bit of Sandip Pandil, bit of Sachin, bit of sobers, but mostly, he's Kazoos. Pramod thinks about his past when he was triaged like a servant after 34 years of service to Bombay cricket. Manju is the younger brother. He is the real thing in Cricket. Tommy sir asks Pramod about what Jains said. It is as follow,

Seven varieties of truth exist. Seven, one, this younger brother might in fact be the real thing. Two, he might be a fake. Three, the boy might simultaneously be the real thing and a fake. Fourth, he might exist in some state beyond reality and fraudulence that we humans cannot hope to comprehend. Five, he might in fact be the real thing and yet exist in a state beyond our poor human capacity to comprehend. Six- (P-7)

Tommy sir proudly says Pramod that Hockey is India's rational game, because Indians chests are suitable to it where as football is the future. He replied Tommy sir that even football has been the future for 50 years but Cricket will never be replaced by anything. Pramod further says that they haven't spoken English in America in decades. Tommy says him that they haven't played even cricket in decades since 1978. He says that in 1978, Sunny Gavaskar lost his ability to leave the ball outside the off-stump since they all have been playing baseball only calling it Cricket.

Then Tommy sir gets into an auto rickshaw. The auto left the Bandra-Kurla complex for highway then turned into Kalnagar where it stopped outside a mildew-stained housing society. Tommy sir gets out of the auto rickshaw looking up at the fourth floor of the building, "If his daughter Lata had left the lights on the kitchen despite his telling her, for twenty-two years, that this was against every principle of Home Science, a wonderful subject which they once used to teach young women in every college in this country." (P-9)

Tommy complains to Pramod about the modern gifts and boys at the cities as the boys and girls walk all the way out into the rocks then sit down to start kissing. They forget that the ocean exists. The old man raises his fingers to his collarbones, "All at once, the young people stop kissing, because they find themselves sitting in the middle of the ocean, and they start screaming for their lives." (P-9)

Pramod tells him that he loves Radha Kumar rather than his father, the Chutney Raja because he is mad. He tells him that he has met him six months ago. Santheep Pandil is nearly 40 years now. He is a tall and grey-haired man with small eyes. He had been set at maidens, School compounds, gyms, members and any other place where the boys has gathered in white uniform. He had broken many young crickets' heart with a sentence as, "Not good enough for this game, son, try hockey instead." (P-10)

His full name was Narayandro Sadashivrao Kulkarni, his friends call him Tommy, because he was too short. Then his dependent called him Tommy sir. But he hated that name at first. On the day before his marriage in July 1974, he told his wife to know six salient points about himself as,

One, this is my salary statement. Read it and understand I am not a man meant to be rich in life. Two, I don't believe in God. Three, I don't watch movies, whether Hindi, Hollywood and Marathi. Four, every Sunday when Ranji, Harris, Giles, Vijay merchant, Kanga or any type of cricket is being played in city of Bombay,...(P-10)

His wife arrived by over night train from a village near Nashik. Tommy was an educated man with full of allusions. It is noted as,

Educated man, literary man, man of many allusions: his column on the traditions of Mumbai cricket was syndicated in sixteen newspapers around India. Artistic man, cultured man, self-taught painters: his watercolor interpretations black-and-white photos of classic Test matches had been exhibited two universal acclaim at the Jehangir Art Gallery a few years ago. (P-10-11)

Manju Kumar runs down the steps towards a tunnel, the black handled of a cricket bat jutting like an abbreviated Kendo Stick from the kit bag on his left shoulder. Three more stems before he reaches the tunnel, "Fact Stranger than Fiction: place a glass of boiling water in your freezer next to a glass of lukewarm water. The glass of boiling water turns into ice before the lukewarm water. How does one explain this paradox?" (P-11)

Manju was emerging from the tunnel about to cross the road to Azad Maiden, he stops. Manju has stopped the average cricketer who has removed his green cap and raised his head and eyes of the two boys met Sawant takes the paradox in both hands. His brain struggles with High School Physics. His lips get stemmed with Newspaper English. Manju folds his precious piece of Newspaper and tucked it into his cricketkitbag.

Chutney boy wants to be a Young Lion. His father is named Chutney Raja. His big brother is also a Young Lion, who is called as Chutney Raja Junior. His real name is Radha Krishna Kumar, who has grouped up, at the very edge of Mumbai. His father is a variety Chutney salesman whose main work is his sons only as revealed in his works: "We have a family secret which makes us superior to every other cricketing family in the city of Mumbai. There is a secret blessing given to my son Radha by the Lord Subramanya, who is our family deity..." (Page-15)

Radha is compared with Sachin Tendulkar. There is a saying in our language: "He who steals an elephant is also a thief. This means we do not lie in matters big or small. Radha clean bowled Sachin Tendulkar with his fourth ball." (P-15) Radha Kumar has the status of super star in his neighbor. Mr, Ramnath, his neighbor has been seen in front of his ironing stand. Dahisar is famous for purity. It is used to shoot films before the driver becomes dirty. Radha was brought by his father over 10years ago. Mohan Kumar, talks his wife that Radha will make Dahisar famous again.

Manju walk up to the crease with helmet swaying his in crickets over his head. He was still batting. Manju had kept his word to the bowlers punishing each one of them for what they had said about his father and his brother having a girl's name. Pramod watched Manju,

Passing over the boy's dark, eye-heavy face, pointy chin and solitary pimple, and then over his shoulders and biceps, to settle on the crucial part of batsman body. In Australia they bat with their foot work. In India we do it with our wrists. Manjunath Kumar's forearms in action made his coach's mouth water. (P-15)

Manju was back in the one room brick shed, divided by a green curtain where he had lived since his father brought him and his brother to Mumbai 9 years ago. Manju saw shadows morning in the blade of light beneath the closed metal door of his home. His father was answering the neighbors' questions. The dinner was made by his aunt Sharadha. Pressing his palms against his cheeks, the boy went over the newspaper once again: "One theory relies on the 'Lake Effect', which is seen in the cold countries of northern America..." (P-17)

Radha, the young Lion was square-jawed, tall and muscular. He was sometimes mistaken for Manju's uncle, though there was just a year and a month between them. He strained to see through the grating to where his younger brother was directing the pen-torch beam. Manju asked him to spot the light again into the well. First a big turtle came which they called it mother then a second turtle was discovered. It raised its head towards its two human observers.

Radha poked his brother in the ribs. Old Sharadha was their relative of some kind. She was a polyglot remonstrator in Kannada, Hindi and English. She was the only woman to have entered their home for a decade. Mohan Kumar was painted his mustache standing before the mirror on his side of the green curtain. He asked his sons whether they were watching the naked girls in the morning. They replied him that they were looking at turtles. He asked Radha to check his physic.

In minuets they were in school uniform and had packed their cricket boys. Mohan was proud of his sons who were smarter than everyone else his eye in the slum. Manju was good at speaking English. He raised his voice, "Pumpkin Carrot Banana shapes Fruit and Vegetables salad Decorators! Pandal, Marriage, Birthday Experts! Everything in English is written the wrong way and I alone Know!" (P-22)

Manju is the world's second best batsman who only knew how to spell English correctly. He knew how to read other people's mind. Manju could easily tell what other people wanted from him. He could complete their sentences for them. He knew that that mind reading power secret gift had come to him from his mother. He remembered all this about his mother's long, elegant nose and her ravishing smile and her way or looking at him sideways.

She was so scared of her husband she had forgotten her sons. Following their father, the boy had passed the suffered shops of their slum, and through a car bored, WELCOME TO OUR HOME arch as,

The gift of a political party, it was painted blue, and covered by the beaming, disembodied faces of city, statewide and national leaders, at least two of whom were serving Jali sentences, a fact which only heightened the impression that they were so many medieval criminals whose grinning heads had been hoisted up above a city gate. (P-24)

Radha is a well trained boy to empire the each one which is around him. He is trained by his father to know the importance of individual pursuit. His motive is to touch the evils of the personal manners but not to follow them in the rest of his life. Mohan always advices him not to watch any girl in the slum area, because of his concentration should be on Cricket only. Mohan is seen as an arbitrator in over ruling the lives of his sons. He rules over the innocent lives of the young boys.

Old Sharadha, Mohan's sister came to the cooking every day. She made chutneys from green mango, lemon and raw guava. Mohan tried to sell them. He cycled around Mumbai swelling insults from others. Every night when he lay down to the bed, he could say:

Today my son has become a stronger and better batsman. Mohan made Radha hold the cricket bat down on the handle, exactly as Sachin had done. At the age of five he made Radha grow his hair long and pose with the bat for a black-and-white photo exactly as Sachin, Bacchus-haired, had posed at that age. At the age of seven he took Radha by train to Shivaji Park to listen to Ramakant Achrekar, exactly as seven-year old Sachin had been taken to sit at the great Achrekar's feet to learn the science of batsmanship. (P-49)

Mehata was not one of those Parsi gentleman whose Uncle Freddy would any day then be found cold by the nerves inside Cursor Baug, leaving would bleed. Mehata thought a friend, he managing director of the Indian branch of German bank, who knew someone at the construction firm that built the Bandra-world sea link. It was a contact helped him go to sea link with a free pass.

Adiga very artistically weaves the plots with the sub-plots on the fate of the children. Adiga has presented the major issues of Indian parents who follow as. So, the family structure is crumbled and it is broken into pieces by the separation. The novel shows that the cricket players have to bear the broken role in the family as a cost of his father's freedom.

The novel, Selection day is purely depiction of Indian modern young men, who are longing to fulfill their individual pursuit in a new way in the peripheral world. Self assertiveness and rebellious spirit prevailed in this novel, which shows that the new idea is emerging in contemporary India. It is namely Cricket. Adiga also deals with the position of middle class people's status challenging the existing social-cultural system. In the social milieu, they are educated, bold and assertive.

Adiga is the delegate of the present trend in Indian English novel. His works have occupied a unique consign in Indian fiction in English for their fortune and intensity of emotional records. His novels are the illumination of the modern India where the children are being presented to be the individual. His treatment of the migrant order in literature is the most engrossing topic exciting intellectual debate of the modern critics. It is answered clearly that it has been the clash between ego and pursuit of the children who can oppose the oppressed society in order to fulfill their aspirations.
